D&H DISTRIBUTING CO. TO CARRY STREAM TV'S GROUNDBREAKING ELOCITY 7-INCH MOBILE TABLET TO THE U.S. MARKET

iPad competitor available for pre-order starting late August

AUGUST 19, 2010 (PHILADELPHIA, PA) Stream TV Networks has structured a distribution platform for its new mobile tablet that optimizes portability, connectivity and computing power with a distribution powerhouse - D&H Distributing Co. of Harrisburg, PA. Throughout its impressive 93-year history, D&H has accomplished many "firsts" which include distribution of the first color TV, the first home PC and even the very first gaming system. It will now distribute the first seven-inch tablet running the Android 2.2 operating system to hit the US. D&H's award winning fulfillment program effectively provides Stream TV from the outset with the heft of a fully functional, well-oiled, long-running fulfillment team.

CEO Mathu Rajan of Stream TV comments, "We are thrilled that D&H, with all of their expertise and strategic position in the industry, will be facilitating the first orders of our eLocity brand tablets."

"Mobility has consistently been a high-performing category at D&H," said Rob Eby, vice president of purchasing at D&H. "We're always enthusiastic about offering our customers new entries in versatile formats. Tablets are commanding a lot of buyer attention, and Stream TV's Android-based model adds an exciting market driver to the mix."

With a high resolution seven-inch capacitive and multi-touch screen and streamlined dimensions of 8.2 inches by 4.8 inches, the new eLocity A7 tablet will be officially unveiled in late August. The tablet will be available for pre-order shortly thereafter.
